FORMULATION OF SKINCARE PRODUCTS

When deciding what skin care products to use, it is extremely important to take into consideration the way the products and their ingredients are formulated. The method by which the ingredients are developed or sourced, as well as how they are combined together, has a large impact on their effectiveness on the skin..

The old saying, 'you get what you pay for,' rings true when it comes to treating your largest organ, the skin. This is why using a product line that is dedicated to, and formulated for the medical/clinical practice, should be a key factor in your decision-making process.

The source of where the raw ingredients come from is very important. Was it manufactured in a lab or did it come directly from a plant source? If it came from a plant a source, was it cold pressed (to preserve the integrity of the ingredient) or heat processed, which is used in less expensive products because it saves time and money (heat processing causes ingredients to lose a large portion of their value, similar to cooked verses raw vegetables).

Also equally important is the percentage of the active ingredients used. If they are not incorporated at a high enough dosage, they are less likely to create an effective change in the skin. Just because a label reflects a particular ingredient, it does not necessarily mean that a sufficient amount was utilized in the formula.

Do the products you use also protect the skin, or do they only serve a single purpose? Many active ingredients can cause skin inflammation if not properly incorporated into an antioxidant-rich formula. These formulas serve to both protect delicate skin as well as correct the issue at-hand that the active ingredient is targeting.

Medical-grade products are continually checked and formulated for greater efficacy, safety and potency on the skin. Société products were developed using a combination of many years of training, a comprehensive knowledge base and a robust background in chemistry in order to formulate the most effective and safest products for you, our client.
